Long Trail School Has State Finalist in Doodle-4-Google Competition

When the computer giant Google challenged students around the United States to design a logo for their website, several Long Trail School students jumped at the chance. The theme was “What I Wish for the World.” Students in grades 6-12 creatively put their own spins on what those words meant to each of them as they illustrated their wishes using colored pencils, markers, watercolors, and/or computer graphics. Over 28,000 national entries were submitted in March 2009. LTS is proud to announce that seventh grader Andrew Gayda ranked among 400 state finalists. Congratulations to Andrew Gayda for his beautifully illustrated “wish for the world.” Here is his description of a healthier and more eco-friendly world:

My Doodle for Google drawing represents what I wish for the world which is raindrops as clear as the blue sky, plants as green as the ripest green apple, and the sun as bright as a flower petal on a daisy. The world should be a greener place because it would be a healthier environment. - Andrew Gayda
